

Neat Ideas

Cool products that get your kid psyched to put her stuff away.

hang on If your kid can't reach the rod in her closet, try these long-neck hangers. She'll feel more independent (bonus: no more excuses for forgetting to hang up her jacket!). $25 for a set of 20; ezeehanger.net.

bright foot forward The prettiest shoe organizer you've ever seen holds up to 20 pairs of sneakers, boots, and ballet flats (leave a few pockets open for storing a Barbie or two). $24; roomitup.com.

snapped up Instead of cramming play purses, costume jewelry, and headbands onto a shelf, hang them neatly on the Handy Hold All, which has snap-together loops for all her stuff. $30; simplysarahshaw.com.

soft touch Canvas Pop bins fit nicely in small spaces. Load them up with blankets or off-season clothes. $48 for large, $28 for small; loomlife.com.

carry all Handy for shuttling shampoo, bubble bath, and towels from the closet to the bathroom, especially when space is scarce under the sink. This canvas bucket has more than 24 pockets. Medium Stuff Bucket, $14; neatnix.com.

branching out

A beautiful clothes tree will inspire kids to get the hang of cleaning up. And when it's bare, it looks like a piece of mod sculpture. $95; pkolino.com.

When you make organizing fun, cleanup is child's play.

got you pegged

Sure, it's practical, but this wooden animal coatrack with movable pegs is also totally adorable. $48; garnethill.com.

divide and conquer

Separate the clothing in your baby's closet by age—nice during the first year when he's changing sizes every few months. SugarBooger Peek-a-Boo Closet Organizers go from newborn to toddler. $10 for a set of 6; oreoriginals.com.

bin there

Now you can keep your hamper hidden away. These corner bins are perfect for the back of your child's closet. Use them to hold toys too. $35; kangaroomstorage.com.
